Digital Research Cluster

Workshop on e-Publishing

11 June 2014 2:00pm - 6:00pm

Haldane Room

Most e-publishing, academic or otherwise, is not at all innovative, usually providing little more than digital replicas of printed matter. If the College were to start out now as an e-publisher, what would it do? The workshop is intended not as a planning session, but as a blue-skies exercise in thinking: how could a new academic publisher starting from scratch best exploit the innovative and advanced technologies now available?

The workshop is intended primarily for College members, who are welcome to bring guests.

2.00   Welcome and Introduction (David Robey, Wolfson College)

2.15   Adding value to on-line articles (David Shotton, Wolfson College)

2.45   Disrupting academic publishing: returning control to universities (Brian Hole, Ubiquity Press)

3.15   New publishing technologies (Daniel Hook, Digital Science)

3.45   Tea break

4.00   Starting up an Open Access publisher (Paul Ayris, UCL Press)

4.30   What 'publication' now means (Richard O'Beirne, Oxford University Press)

5.00   Publishing and e-Research (Dave De Roure, Wolfson College and Director,Oxford e-Research Centre)

5.30   Panel Discussion with all speakers.

6.00   Drinks reception

DAVID ROBEY

June 2014